PREVENTATIVE MAINTENANCE

P-G-R TRUCK

At Scania, we understand the importance of keeping your truck on the road and minimising the time it spends in the workshop. Therefore we always review our preventative maintenance recommendations to achieve the best outcome for you. This includes capitalising on the product improvements that Scania continually introduces. Scania understands that unscheduled maintenance and repairs add unwanted costs to operators. When a truck is off the road, there are not only the continuing overheads of repayments and wages, but there are also the on-costs of replacement vehicles, call-outs and towing. And, of course, there is the cost to your goodwill and the potential damage to your relationship with your customer when the freight can't be delivered on time.

Scania has produced a list of some of the items we suggest be replaced or serviced as part of a preventative maintenance program that will maximise your fleet availability.

How Scania has come up with its preventative maintenance suggestions.

All Scania's preventative maintenance recommendations are based on Scania vehicles operating in a cross-section of environments, from short-haul distribution trucks to long-haul road train prime movers. Preventative service intervals are affected by a range of factors. These include:

Gross weights. The higher your gross weight, the harder your vehicle works.

Speed. Vehicles operating at highway speeds will often experience higher wear on engine and driveline components.

Temperatures. Vehicles operating in higher temperatures may suffer higher wear rates, particularly when operating at high gross weights.

Road surface. Vehicles operating offroad or on sub-standard bitumen may see greater wear of cab and axle air suspension components.

Duty cycle. Vehicles operating in stopstart applications or heavy traffic may experience higher clutch, starter motor, turbocharger and transmission wear.
